

Food Service Management

The food production management rotations are designed to expand knowledge and provide opportunities to apply principles of management in a food service operation. The intern is introduced to production units in food service, becoming familiar with employee job descriptions, activity guidelines, and food service equipment. The intern will learn the room service delivery system. The Intern is exposed to ordering and receiving systems, production forecasting, materials management, personnel management, employee in-service programming, customer service issues, and cafeteria operations. The Intern will assume responsibility for the food service area by performing staff functions in supervisory positions.
